TALK, BUT NOT ACTION

Senators Lindsay and Cullom Speak Against and for Tariff Reform.

ANTI-INCOME TAXERS SCORED

Kentucky Senator Defends the Bill and Criticises Democratic Defection and Delay. Cullom Vigorously Opposes the Bill and Favors a Permanent Tariff Commission.

The tariff discussion vesterday consisted of a speech by Senator Lindsay, of Kentucky, for the bill, and Senator Cullom, of Illinois,

Senator Lindsay spoke as follows:

The country expected that any attempt by the Democratic party to reduce and equalize tariff taxnition would meet with stubborn and persistent opposition by those who believe that import duties upon foreign goods should be imposed for the protection of American manufacturers but it was not anticipated that the real difficulties in the way of tariff reform would be interposed by members of the party who won the Presidential contest upon the distinct declaration that it is a fundamental principle of their belief. "that the Federal government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only." It was, of course, known of all men that busiliess conditions created by more than thirty years of protection would make it difficult, and in some respects impracticable, to enforce to its utmest limit this fundamental principle by the first tariff bill to be chacted into a law by the Democratic majorities in the two Houses of Congress, but it was not, until a very recent date, doubted that there would be such a revision as to remove from the tariff lies their most flagrant in equalities, and to emphasize the fact that the great work of putting our tariff legislation uses a constitutional and equitable basis Senator Lindsay spoke as follows that the great work of putting our tariff legisla-tion upon a constitutional and equitable basis had been commenced. The Democracy of the country have justly criticised the Wilson bill, be-cause it falls in many respects to care inequal-ties and remove oppressive discriminations. But the bemocrats in every section of the coun-try, with the greatest unanimity, agree that the pending bill, with or without the proposed amendments, is ministely better than the exist-ing tariff laws, and that it is the imperative duty of the Democratic members of this body at the earliest practicable time to remove the uncer-tainty that aggravates the existing condition of business affairs.

thempt now. Continuing, Senator Lindsay criticised the osition of Senator Hill and others, who in-mated that the income tax might kill the ill, and pointed out the appalling conse-uences that would result from such action, and went into a lengthy discussion and sup-port of the tax. After this he took up the tariff in its relations to Kentucky, closing with an elequent appeal for the passage of the Senator Cullom, of Illinois, who followed, said:

Senator Canom, of Hinnois, who conowed, saids:

I am intensely anxious that this bill shall not pass. I do not nitter this sentence as a mere partisan, but I speak in the interest of the people of this great country. Were I to look at this measure simply as a partisan, I think I might properly welcome its passage, because it must unquestionably result in benefitling the Republican jourty by reason of the defuge of popular antagonism it must create against the Beneficial party, which now fathers the Wilson bill and presses it to passage. But, sir, is doubt feel myself until to be here as a representative of a great constituency were I to turn aside from the daily of seeking only to promote the best interests of the people whom I have the honor to represent as well as the whole country. The initial policy of the chilital policy of the chilitalpend universe is protection. The civilized world has grown out and away from burturn's free trade, and has developed a very universal recognition of a protective doc.

San me aephoneans and congress a con-tent and allow this collimination without protest. I think not. While I have a voice and a vote in this body! I shall except them in the interest of the country and for the defeat of the Wisson measure. I hope there is still enough good sense and patriotism to be found in a few of these elected to the Senate as Democrats to join with use of the minority in its opposition and bury if in obliviou. True, it is being driven forward if in oblivion. True, it is being driven forward with whip and spur; it is to be rushed to final action and no rest is to be allowed. Every other measure is to be side-tracked and the Wisson billis to have the right of way. But somebody may throw a switch out of line and ditch the train. Lat us hope so.

I have referred to the incompetency of the know that the people at large, Democrats and Republicans alike, have no confidence in the pretensions and promises of the managers of that party? For eighteen years the Democrats platforms have been burdened with platitudes of reform, and ever since that time the party lins quadriennially resolved, first, that this country, needs reform, and second, that we are the reformers.

Continuing, Senator Cullom turned his attention to the incomestax, which he denounced as a sandbagging proposition, the device of highwaymen, etc. Following this discussion he took up the various schedules of the tariff bill, criticising where changes had been made from the McKulley law and showing the result that the parsage of the Wilson bill would have on the industries of his own state.

The tariff commission if properly constructed, would be able to avoid the interminative intengratities which give so much annoyance to the administrative branch of the government. Let us, then, in this year of grace, build a monument fails time, a monument which will do benor alike to both political parties. Let us create and vivily a system, one something like a system, a plan under which, by simple methods, just duties may be computed and decent wages be assured to the peopls of our country.

I worked with all my speed, yet it was more than an hour, I judge, before I had a track made for them.

When I returned to the sleigh I was thoroughly heated and as wet from perspiration as if I had been plunged into water.

I thew I was running a fearful risk in sitting down in that plercing wind, but there seemed to be no alternative; so, proteeting myself as well as possible from the blast, which seemed to grow in strength, I urged the horses along.

As they proceeded slowly my companion threw the covering from her head and said:

"You must have got heated, working as hard as you do something at once. If you sit there till the sold strikes you will die."

"I do not think there is any danger," I said.

"But I know there is," answered she. Then throwing down the robes she stood up in the sleigh and added: "Give me the reins. Get down there out of the wind and cover yourself up."

At this moment a shudder passed over me.

"But you"—
"Never mind me; I will be all right. Besides, if will only be for a fiftle-wille."

A second shudder, worse than the first, roused the thoroughly to my danger, and, protesting that it was only for a minute or two that I should avail myself of the shelter of the sieigh box, I crouened down and allowed her to cover me.

I was soon shaking like one in an ague fit, hot and cold by turns. How slow we seemed to be going! Two or three times I tried to rise and take the reins, but was quite mable, and my dompanion assured me each time that she was not cold and was doing famously—the excitement kept her warm she said.

strange to say, sae was really not very much the worse for her terrible experience, but I had been destrious.

"Where is the lady now?" I asked, but added, "of course she has gone. I should like to have seen her.

The nurse stepped aside without replying. I looked up for an explanation, when my eyes rested upon the face of Kate Macdonald.

"Katie," was all I could say.

"Aleck!" she replied, and took my outstretched hand in hers.

"Katie," I said, after a moment of happiness to deep for words, "is it passible that you were my companion and my sarior?

"I do not know about my being the last, but I certainly was the first."

"And I did," also said with her merry laugh, "And what is more, I knew you after you first spoke to me."

I looked at her bands. There was no ring

mously—the excitement kept her warm she said.

I did not believe her then, and I know now what she said was not true—that she suffered terribly. But I did not know until they told me two weeks afterward at the hotel in Brenton that she took off her own wraps to make my covering heavier. Tof I was meshible when they lifted me out of the sleigh.

When, three weeks later, weak from fever, I employed my first conscious moment in asking after my companion. The nurse told me that she had driven the horses into Brenton at a gallop.

Not knowing about the roads she had naturally enough followed the straight one, shift of fourteer miles had driven through the forest, with me lying unconscious at lite test.

"Katie." I said. after a moment of happiness to give in the point of the wow were my companion and my sarior?
